

Graduate Assistantship in the Office of Academic Advising (within OASIS)

Contact Person: Chris DaCosta, cdacosta@ric.edu, Director of Academic Advising

OASIS, Adams Library, Level 1
2021-2022

Full-time advising positions

A Graduate Assistant in the Office of Academic Advising (within OASIS) is someone who coaches undergraduate students as they chart a successful path at Rhode Island College, and will carry a small case load of first-year, Exploring students

Graduate Assistants hold individually focused academic advising appointments to share college information, assist students in selecting appropriate courses for the Exploring Majors (Undeclared) and support students' exploration and discovery of various academic and social opportunities that will enhance their experience at Rhode Island College. More specifically, Graduate Assistants work with undergraduate students as they make decisions about majors, career paths, course selection, and meeting college requirements including the requirements for secondary admission to the Feinstein School of ED, School of Nursing, and School of Social Work. In previous years Graduate Assistants have played a vital role in serving the academic advising needs of the students.

Additionally, graduate assistants collaborate with professional staff in the development of new retention efforts at RIC. Graduate assistants will use Starfish to advise their students and will support the intervention efforts for at-risk students through the Starfish early-alert system. Graduate students may also serve as academic coaches and provide support for students who are on academic probation.

In this role graduate students have the opportunity to work with a diverse team while developing skills that include but are not limited to: academic advising, communication, problem solving, interpersonal skills, academic counseling, and teamwork. In addition, graduate students in this role will be able to develop experience in student success initiatives, retention efforts, academic advising philosophies, first year transitions, student development, social media marketing and higher education.

Please send application, resume, and cover letter to Chris DaCosta, cdacosta@ric.edu